Claire Jansen-Faught is a researcher with experience in academic institutions and cultural organizations. She researched and wrote Heritage Toronto's State of Heritage 2025: From Community Voices to Action report.

The report tackles this question: if the heritage sector were to put community perspectives first, what kind of city could Toronto be five years from now?

It offers a new vision for 2030, where Indigenous histories are embedded in our city's identity, cultural neighbourhoods are protected, and communities have the power to shape their own heritage stories. It contains 15 key recommendations.
